There are so many people that I want to thank – you all, I hope, know who you are. But the last three years have been eventful and the writing of this thesis has been one of the lesser challenges. And so, there are just a few, very heartfelt and uncharacteristically emotional, thanks that I wish to make. First and foremost, to Mike; you have been endlessly patient and have always been generous with your time and advice. You gave me the space to find my own path through my PhD, particularly in difficult times, and I am so grateful for this. To Jeremy; you advised me thoughtfully and carefully. Thanks for always having encouraging words at the right moments. To Patrick; thank you for everything – from science advice to gossip to tea-infused gin, this thesis probably wouldn't exist without you! To Benedict, Dom, Fiona, Georgia, George and Mike; my luck in counting you as my friends is beyond words. Thank you for the conversation, laughter and wisdom that you all bring to my life. To Jack; you had to be there for much of it, but you didn't have to be the amazing support that you were. Thanks for tirelessly dealing with my every up and down along the way. You really are a very special person. To Alex; good job growing up! I could not be prouder to call you my brother. Knowing that you are always there for me means so much. To Nick; you have been there for me in my lowest moments and my best. I cannot imagine having done this without you, and I have so many memories that I will cherish for the rest of my life. You got me through this and I am so grateful. To Mum and Dad; you have been, are, and will always be my best friends in the world. Support does not even begin to cover what you have given me, not just over the last three years but my whole life. You are both caring, generous and wise, and I am so lucky to be able to call you Mum and Dad.

Thank you.
